Findings

Upon the instructions of IP Attorney Curtis Edmondson, the investigator was to view the Dallas Buyer's Club movie. I initiated the search by looking for local theaters that would be playing movie; it was not currently in any movie theaters. The movie was available on YouTube and Netflix.

YouTube Findings:

On February 20, 2018 YouTube provided a pay-per-view Dallas Buyer's Club full movie, there was only one port to select the full movie. This port provided information the length of movie to be 1:56:53 (one hour fifty-six minutes fifty-three seconds) and stated it was uploaded by Universal Movies on December 22, 2013. Upon starting the movie there was an unavoidable (forced to watch) series of previews promoting other films; I could not skip this segment to select "play." There was a variety of clips that did not identify the movie but showed snippets such as "Milk" and "Burn After Reading." Focus Features and Universal was credited and then more movies were promoted, this lasted approximately 5:10:00 (five minutes ten seconds). Those movies promoted were: "The Best Man Holiday" lasting approximately 0:55 seconds, “Rush” lasting approximately 0:33 seconds, “About Time” lasting approximately 0:32 seconds, and “Closed Circuit” lasting approximately 2:47 (two minutes and forty-seven seconds).

Following the above listed advertisements, there was no direct launch. A screen displayed to select from the following: Play, Scenes, Bonus, Setup, and Previews. This was one more to promotion for other movies and a delay to watch the Dallas Buyer’s Club.

By selecting the “Previews” button it promoted Working Titles, the following movies were advertised: “Closed Circuit” lasting approximately 2:19 (two minutes nineteen seconds), “World’s End” lasting approximately 0:32 seconds, “Admission” lasting approximately 0:32 seconds, “Hyde Park of Hudson” lasting approximately 0:32 seconds, “Promise Land” lasting approximately 0:32 seconds, and “Moonrise Kingdom” lasting approximately 0:31 seconds.

By selecting the “Play” button this initiated the Dallas Buyer’s Club movie. Prior to the movie there was approximately 2:11 (two minutes eleven seconds) of previews, in which approximately 0:55 seconds included a Blu-ray advertisement, FBI Anti-Piracy Warning, Motion Picture Rating with an “R”, and Universal Movies.
